Shri Govind Guru

Govind Guru was a social and religious reformer in the early 1900s in the tribal-populated border areas of present-day Rajasthan and Gujarat. He is seen as having popularized the Bhagat movement, which was first started in the 18th century.

Govind Guru was born in the former Dungarpur State. He gave himself a primary education with the help of a pujari in his village. His wife and child reportedly died in the famine of 1900, after which he moved into the neighbouring Sunth State. There, Govind Guru became the disciple of a Hindu monk Rajgiri; in honor of Rajgiri, Vinda changed his name into Govind Guru. Around 1909 he returned to Dungarpur State to the village of Bedsa.

Govind Guru engaged himself in "improving the moral character, habits, and religious practices" of the tribal. He organized the sampa sabha with the intent of serving the Tribal people. Govind Guru preached monotheism, observance of temperance, forsaking crimes, following agriculture, giving up beliefs in superstition, etc. Drawing on the ritual practices of the Shaivite sect Dasnami Panth, Govind Guru encouraged his followers to tend a dhuni (fire pit) and hoist a nishan (flag) outside their houses.

Govind Guru's teachings were originally aimed at social and religious reform but he gradually "developed a strong critique of hierarchy and exploitation" of the tribal by ruling classes. He advised the tribal that their destitution was caused by princely rulers and jagirdars. Govind Guru preached that Bhils were the rightful owners of the land and they also the right to rule over it.

Within a short time, Govind Guru garnered a large following among the tribals in the states of Sunth, Banswara, Dungarpur and the British districts of Panch Mahals. He faced active opposition from the rulers of the states in which he preached. Reasons cited for the opposition include decreased revenues from liquor sales (because of Govind Guru forbidding liquor to his disciples) and the subversion of the rulers' authority because of Govind Guru's growing influence.

Govindgiri was imprisoned by the ruler of Dungarpur but, apprehending a commotion among the tribal people, released in April 1913 and exiled from Dungarpur state. Between then and October 1913, Govind Guru moved from one village to another under harassment by local rulers. After an attempt by the ruler of Idar to capture Govind Guru while he was in the Idar territory, Govind Guru and his adherents formed a defensive position at Mangarh, a hillock on the borders of the former states of Banswara and Sunth.

On October 31, 1913, Govind Guru adherents captured a couple of police personnel of the Sunth State who were sent up the hill for reconnaissance. On November 1, 1913, the adherents attempted an unsuccessful attack on the Partabgarh fort in Sunth State and looted the village of Brahm in Banswara state. Apprehending danger, local rulers sought British assistance, and the Mangarh was besieged by local and British troops, including the Mewar Bhil Corps and troops from the states of Banswara, Dungarpur, Sunth and Baria.

On November 17, 1913, the troops attacked Mangarh, an action in which "several Bhils died" and Govind Guru and his lieutenant Dhirji Punja were captured. Those arrested at Mangarh were tried and Govind Guru was sentenced to be hanged, Punja Pargi sentenced to life imprisonment, and the rest to 3 years' imprisonment. On appeal, Govind Guru's sentence was reduced to life imprisonment, Pargi's sentence was confirmed.

Govind Guru was released from prison in 1919 on condition he would not participate in political activities. Until his death in 30 October 1931, he lived in present-day Panchmahal district of Gujarat.
